Extra: VT Students Strike Revenge

A few weeks ago, in a stunning act of brutality, a group of unidentified persons allegedly stole and destroyed a pair of Blacksburg's Hokie Bird statues. It has recently been discovered that the party responsible for these treacherous acts was composed of none other than University of Virginia students. One of the statues was designed and painted by a local farmer; the other was decorated by over two hundred children from a local daycare.

eradicator and leader of la Résistance, was questioned shortly after the incident last month. "Well, we are still hoping to get clearance from the higher ups to utilize our cache of tactical nuclear weapons, but I think we were saving them for West Vir-err, something else of importance. Yes - importance."

Many doubted the ability of Virginia Tech's students to exact a prompt retaliatory action until a few days ago, when UVA's entire campus was reported missing. James Walton Peuderschmitt IV, a current University of Virginia student, was found shortly after the incident wandering around Charlottesville wearing only a polo shirt.

"These crimes against humanity must not go unpunished. We must do everything in our power to send aid to those in need," commented Matt Allen, a prominent albeit misinformed local bass player.

"This is so senseless." He stopped briefly to adjust his collar. "I can't believe it came to this. I mean, we are Virginia's premier educational institution. Uh...has anyone seen my fraternity house?"

While many Blacksburg residents spent the last few weeks in mourning, several community members went to work to rectify the recent injustice. Collin Calhoun, avid tree

Blacksburg police were tipped off a few hours later by an anonymous witness who claimed to be hearing, "a lot more noise than usual," coming from the area around the Dietrick lawn. The source of the problem was tracked down when VT Police detective Todd Saulsby discovered one of UVA's dining centers hidden on the third floor of Pritchard Hall. "We now have reason to believe that the rest of their campus has been hidden in the Blacksburg area," commented Saulsby.

No group has officially claimed responsibility for the theft. However, Collin Calhoun has been spotted on several occasions in fits of maniacal laughter. "They'll never guess where I put their football stadium," he chuckled.

Tory Smith is grateful that none of UVA's campus was hidden near his room.

University Honors Announces New Community Course

In recent months, members of the Hillcrest community have become increasingly apathetic and even disdainful toward the monotony of honors colloquia and reading groups offered each semester. To combat this wave of ennui, the honors staff has announced a new option for community members. The new courses, called "Breeding Groups", will consist entirely of intra-Hillcrest couples. Bralaine, Kevlory, Petulia, Caitlek, Rydget, Jeffetta, Barky and Jeremygreg have all expressed intense interest in this unique opportunity.

The groups will focus on relationship difficulties specific to the residents of Hillcrest. At the conclusion of the semester, students will be required to write an essay detailing their newly gained insights into the controversial practice of 'Hillcrest'. To gain a better perspective on this situation I have gone undercover. (Don't tell Susan, but she's just my means to getting the inside scoop on this whole situation.) Next semester I will lead the first Breeding Group and am hoping for mass participation. Go find another nerd and get twittertated!

CHEAP AS FREE!

Let's face it. You're broke. Your parents stopped sending you money sometime in February. You tried selling off your internal organs to science, but you can only do that so many times. But there's good news, fellow 'Crestacians. You don't need a huge chunk of change to have a good time in Blacksburg! Many fun things cost very little. So take a look in your couch, scrounge around on the floor, or rob a small child as I present to you:

The Top 6 Things to Do in Blacksburg for 75 Cents or Less

6. Buy 15 sticks of gum. Tick off 15 girls with long hair. Or blow an enormous bubble and try to sail across the Drillfield. Extra credit if you can sail across the Drillfield, land on 15 girls and get gum in their hair in the process!
5. Buy 14 water cups at West End. Use the remaining nickel to play your very own game of air pong. Oh boy! This "party" "game" is a huge hit at Liberty University! When you get bored of that you can become a cup stacking champion.
4. Pretend that Tory is a vending machine. Stick a quarter in him every time he opens his mouth. Demand candy. You know you want to try it.
3. Superglue one quarter to the ground. Use the other 50 cents to buy some Fun Dip. Stupid pranks are always funnier if you're buzzed on Fun Dip.
2. Put a two-word personal ad in the Collegiate Times. I'm afraid that's all you can afford. You'll have to practice being clear and concise. "Want Woman" or "Buy Freshman" are some good ideas to start you off.
1. Go to the library and make some photocopies. You can copy 7 different body parts, or the same one 7 times. Or if it's a particularly large ahem body part, maybe only twice. Either way, artwork like this makes lovely Easter or Passover presents for your friends and family.

David Choquette would like to point out that the words "Brad's Mom" did not appear in this article. She does not live in Blacksburg. Those were two unrelated statements.

Resident Catholic Named Best Jew

This past Tuesday, approximately 20 Hillcrest residents gathered to celebrate the Jewish holiday of Passover. During the course of the seder, residents learned about the ten plagues, the Jews' flight from Egypt, and the crossing of the Red Sea.

As the Seder came to a close, the participants left the dinner table and began the search for the Afikomen, the most delicious piece of matza of them all. The Jews at the Seder searched and searched, but to no avail. Greg Swieter, goy, finally consented to aid in the search. Within minutes, Swieter found the Afikomen and was named the Best Jew in Hillcrest.

Since being given this illustrious title, Swieter has made some significant changes. First of all, Greg has now taken to celebrating an additional Sabbath. Previously, Greg rested on only Sunday, working day and night the other six days of the week. However, in light of his new title, Greg has taken to loafing around on Saturday as well.

Secondly, Swieter has halted his most scrupulous personal grooming habits (namely shaving). In an official statement released late last night, Swieter said that he was "growing peyes.... But they'll look funny at first" so he'll let his whole face grow in to even it out. In response to this statement, Collin Calhoun, resident beard expert added, "If he lets his moustache grow out he can have twice the number of peyes. I'm certain that with this strategy, he will soon gain the title of Best Jew in the universe."

Thirdly, Greg has been sighted on the internet celebrating Hanukkah. He is obviously garbed in a talis, a traditional Jewish prayer shawl (and not a t-shirt), as well as kippah, a Jewish head covering. In this internet video, he is seen giving a fantastically wrapped Hanukkah gift.

After sustaining a recent softball injury, Swieter was seen sporting tafillin, rather than an ace bandage. He has proclaimed that the words of God have greater healing power than the elasticity and support of a bandage ever could.

It has been speculated that Swieter is planning on legally changing his name to Swieterstein, so that all will know that he is the Best Jew in Hillcrest.
