Pernicious Germ Discovered, Bay Staters Affected

After suspicious instances in which the citizens of Massachusetts have had trouble making up their minds, microbiologists and epidemiologists in the state have detected the existence of a bacterium running rampant in the commonwealth's drinking water. Vacillatus fluctuatum has been found to cause wishy-washyness, inability to hold on to convictions, and confusion of beliefs. Scientists in New England have affectionately nicknamed this pathogen the "flip-flop germ" because of its symptoms.

Doctors and researchers from the Center for Disease Control are working diligently to contain the spread of the microbe to Massachusetts. It is expected that the current outbreak will have no major effect on the national or international populations. That being said, current estimates claim that microbial flip-flop infections affect a staggering 17 percent of all Americans currently campaigning for President. With such a large portion of the population afflicted with flip-flop symptoms, one can only assume that global impact is not only possible, but statistically plausible as well.

A former victim promotes awareness.

The CDC and American Medical Association advise that all citizens of Massachusetts, having been exposed to contaminated drinking water, should take a few precautionary guidelines to protect their beliefs and convictions. First of all, under no circumstances should exposed Bay Staters attempt to explain their values or views to large groups of people, especially over a microphone. Secondly, strenuous days of bus riding, press conferencing, and mud slinging should be kept to a bare minimum. Thirdly, and most importantly, anyone exposed to vacillatus fluctuatum should refrain from shaking hands and kissing babies. Those possibly infected should remain at home in comfortable clothing to insure the security and promote the safe return of one's values.

The last breakout of the flip-flop germ reached its peak from July to November 2004. As many as 50 percent of the population pursuing the White House were infected with the malignant microbe. Thankfully for today's population, we know a great deal more about the detrimental disease caused by vacillatus fluctuatum. One can only hope that our knowledge will save us from the possible danger presented to the international community by the flip-flop germ.

Hillpublican Primary Still a Toss-Up

And now for an update about how the major Hillpublican Party candidates are doing:

Former Governor Jack Dudley

Despite taking the early Eggleston caucus last month, Dudley has been unable to continue his streak except for a victory by strategic voting in the West AJ primary. Even the endorsement of Chuck Norris has been unable to help him as of late; however, this is likely because he recently advocated amending the Constitution to reflect the 2007 Colloquium Secundum document, saying "it's a lot easier to change the Constitution than it would be to change the word of the living Geoff Adams."

Former Governor Michael Blackwell

Despite questions regarding his Pastafarian faith, Blackwell has been polling well throughout the campaign. However, what remains to be seen is whether his numerous flip-flops on the issues will completely derail his candidacy. Said political strategist James Carville: "I just don't think the Hillpublican voters will go for someone with that much political baggage. Sandals, maybe, but never flip-flops."

Former Mayor Dan Thorp

Thorp polled quite well early on in the race; however, he has not been able to maintain this lead into the part where people actually vote for him. Also, after following a disastrous strategy of diverting all his resources to the 226/228 primary in an attempt to capture its highly lucrative Senior vote, he was crushed following a last minute surge by current front-runner Papillon.

Senator Terry Papillon

After running into budgetary issues and being forced to shed staffers early in the primary season, Papillon has experienced a surging comeback following a strong showing in the New Res Hampshire primary. He is now touring the building in his trademark bus, the Classics Talk Express.

Representative Russell Shrader

Shrader has received just one sentence about him in every political newspaper article ever, and this will be no exception.

THE TOP 8 THINGS THAT WILL CHANGE WHEN DAVID CHOQUETTE IS ELECTED PRESIDENT

On this Tuesday which was both Super and Fat, David Choquette, who is also super and fat, announced his candidacy for President of the United States. Choquette's platform includes many reforms, which has caused some critics to label him as a dangerous radical. But left and right-wingers alike are flocking to his camp like Hillcrestaceans to a Rubix Cube. Perhaps you have not yet heard about the sweeping changes Choquette has in store for our great nation? Well, my dear comrades, take a look!

1. Hall Sports will be declared the new national passtime. Presidential pardons to all who receive JRs.

2. The national currency will be changed to root beer. The whole economy will be liquidated.

3. All voting will take place on the whiteboard on the door of room 237. Prepare for long lines on national election days.

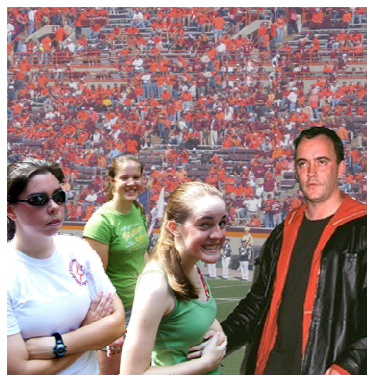

4. Two words: Plaid Ambassador.

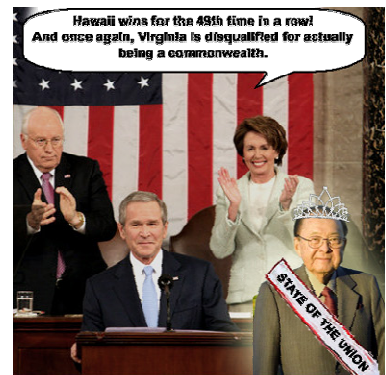

5. Air Force One will be so, so much cooler.

6. Deron Washington will be appointed to the Supreme Court. Duke will probably be declared unconstitutional.

7. Convicted drug abusers will spend a manditory 200 hours giving back to the community in whichever way they can best.

8. The State of the Union will be an award given out annually to whichever state is the prettiest.

No, THIS IS OPRAH!

If there's one thing I learned from watching the West Wing, it is that demographics can always be counted on to vote consistently. Therefore, it seemed a no-brainer at the inception of the Democratic primary race to determine that all the women aged 20-45 would be voting for Hillary Clinton. Now, for the politically uneducated, I'll explain the reasons for this. You see, every minority demographic casts their primary votes based exclusively on how close the candidate is to that minority. For example, the Jews all voted for Lieberman. Likewise, all Catholics voted for Kennedy, and all black people voted for Bill Clinton (all Satanists voted for Cheney? Too soon? Still, probably less offensive than the black thing...) (I'm going to Hell.)

It's Science.

So, of course, all 20-45 year-old women should have been voting Hillary, regardless of race or religion (being a woman trumps all. It is, after all, the oldest minority label.) (Interestingly enough, there are currently 3% more women in the United States than men.)

However, all these completely predictable statistics became irrelevant when Barack Obama announced his biggest celebrity endorsement yet: Oprah. With this new development, everything we ever knew about predicting the minority vote went out the window. Female Democrats across the nation felt a great disturbance in the force; given the choice between Hillary and Oprah, how were they supposed to know who they should vote for? On the one hand, Hillary would be sure to address every problem women had ever encountered in America while in office. On the other hand, Oprah controls their ovaries (and, I hear, the weather. Did you see that snow that hit Southern California? Guess who they nominated in that primary...) Even Hillary found herself wondering if Obama would be the better candidate.

A great pause came over the women of the Democratic party that day. Between giving crack to illegal immigrants and having abortions all the time, they just didn't have the time or energy to make their own decision about who to vote for. Since then, chaos has reigned across the nation. With no one to guide their thoughts, these women seem to have all gone haywire. They have been seen having violent mood swings, yelling loudly for no apparent reason, and acting generally crazy. (And the men haven't noticed a thing.)

How will this affect the Democratic primary? Will enough women survive this period of unrest to continue to populate the U.S. with Democrats? Is Oprah really a Republican agent, laughing at the madness? Tune in after next week to find out!

Kathleen is a member of at least two demographics she made fun of in this article.

Now we really know why Hillary looks so crazy.

Selection Committee Chooses Huckabee for Honors Director Position

Breaking news from Burruss Hall: The job search committee for the Honors Director position has made a decision. Yes, that's right, fair Hillcrustaceans, never fear, a new Honors Director is here. But who could it be? It's no one other than Mike Huckabee, the former governor of Arkansas, southern Baptist minister, and presidential candidate. When asked why Huckabee was chosen, Dan Thorp said, "Huckabee believes in the most morally correct values for Hillcrest to aspire to. I look forward to seeing the changes he is going to make in the buildings over the summer."

What could those changes be? Well, I talked to an inside source who told me that Huckabee has several new changes in mind for Hillcrest and Main Campbell. Firstly, Huckabee is going to segregate the halls by gender, and make the card swipes only work on the floor where you live. You thought the card readers were bad before- just imagine them after Huckabee comes in! In addition to splitting the genders, he plans to start theology classes as part of FHS and turn reading groups into prayer time which is mandatory for every student. And if you even think of moving to Main Campbell, that counts as immigration and he's against all forms of that. Also, Huckabee plans to get rid of 'no pants

Friday' in Main Campbell. When asked, Terry Papillon said, "What? No pants Friday is my favorite part about having an office in Main Campbell!" It only gets worse from here: women having to wear dresses around the building and RAs doing room checks at 11 pm every night. The list goes on and on.

Who knows what Huckabee will do next? With his presidential hopes downtrodden, Huckabee might recruit Mitt Romney for an Assistant Director position, and life in Hillcrest will only get better for everyone from there with the addition of Romney to the staff. Until next time, unless Huckabee bans women from writing silliness like this, I'm out.

Kari Adkins would like nothing more than to go to Bob Jones University and live by changes like the ones Huckabee is proposing.

Future President Ron Paul Taps Hillpress Staff Members to Key Governmental Positions

With polls and the media all but sure of a Presidential victory for Ron Paul, staff members have leaked his choices for key positions.

Vice President — Brad Shapiro

Every President needs someone to make their ticket attractive. Who more attractive and charming to do it than Hillpress editor Brad Shapiro?

Secretary of Defense — David Choquette

With all the crap going on, Ron Paul wants to send a message to the world that the United States has a sense of humor. The rest of the world hates us, right? Do we solve problem that by invading? No. We solve it by sending Dave Matthews to give them all hugs.

Secretary of the Interior — Jeremy Henry

He hasn't gone to class in at least a year, so he's a perfect choice to keep an eye out on the interior.

Secretary of the Exterior — Peter Kauffmann

We all know that Peter is King of all things outdoors, whether it be grilling, Snow-Jacking, mapping, or just plain being awesome. Ron Paul knows his outdoors experience is lacking and at 120 years old, he needs someone he can trust to take care of him when he is on the exterior of the White House.

Ambassador to Germany — Tory Smith

Dr. Paul couldn't think of anybody else to send to Germany, so he picked the person in the U.S. with the most Germany t-shirts. Plus, as he proved last year on Veterans' Day, Tory hates America. What better way to deal with an America-hater than to send him to Germany?

Brad Shapiro is the Chief Political Analyst for the Golf Channel. He also believes that Peter should go with him to the Grand Tetons.
