

HILLPRESS

H I L L C R E S T H A L L - N A W M A N , I ' M A H O R S E

Ask Professor Jeremy: I love the Smell of Tenure in the Morning

Once again, dear children, it's time for everyone's favorite semi-weekly quasi-legitimate column, Ask Professor Jeremy. This week he will be answering questions sent in from various students throughout campus. The names of the students have been changed to protect their identities.

*Dear Professor Jeremy,
What inspired you to become a professor?*

Sincerely, Gavid Dagnon

Well Gavid, if that is your real name, Professor Jeremy decided to become of a professor for one simple reason – the ladies. Everyone knows that there's nothing more attractive than a balding 60-something year old man wearing a bad button-up shirt tucked into pants that are pulled up WAY too high, writing down what appears to be hieroglyphics on a chalkboard even though you're pretty sure it's a math class.

Yo Professor J,

Do you offer curves?

Your pal, David 'I go by my middle name now' Kauffmann

Professor Jeremy is not really sure what you mean by that question. If you are referring to t-scoring, then yes, there is extensive t-scoring in the classes under this professor's tutelage. Many people think this is ridiculous, but since the class average on the tests before the t-scoring is roughly a three, it is necessary.

Dear Professor Tissue, I mean Jeremy,

Why do you try to be funny...you don't know anything...you lack a sense of humor!

Yours truly, the Architect of Evil

Professor Jeremy has a question for you: If you are an architect, why are you taking Analytical Chemistry?

Professor Jeremy,

Do you offer pluses and minuses? It can negatively impact my grade if you do not offer plusses.

Klaus VonNever

Excellent question Klaus.

Well, that's all the time we have for today. Professor Jeremy hopes that you all learned something from today's lecture, and Ryan Luck, go to class. As always, I'm Professor Jeremy, and you're not.

Professor Jeremy has received tenure and no longer gives a flying frack about being a good teacher.

WORLD NEWS UPDATE

So as many of you know, this week, the Thai military staged a coup against the existing government. I know, I know, some of you are thinking... "Come on, that isn't newsworthy... especially when the Iran/United States showdown is so dynamic. I mean they totally haven't been saying the exact same things to each other for the last 2 years..."

Well, I understand where you are coming from, but this particular coup, was a "bloodless" coup. Well, kids, I'm not sure if you learned about the term, oxymoron, in middle school, but in my book, if there is no blood, it is not a coup... it's an election... only without the voting. What do they think? That the word coup d'etat is French or something? Anyway, to make matters even more unbelievable, the King of Thailand appeared publicly in support of the coup! Just who was getting kicked out of office?

The Prime Minister, who was the apparent target, was not even in the country when this coup happened. So the general of the army, who is supposed to be this real badass comes into the state house, shakes the hand of the guard, walks into the office, likes the LazyBoy, decides to sit down awhile and calls it a coup? Wtf mate?

Incidents like this make me proud to be from this great country we call America. Ridiculous things never happen in our government or military. When we want to fight the party in power, we don't sneak into their offices when they are out of the country, we talk about their sex lives to their faces and accuse them of starting the KKK. God Bless America.

Brad Shapiro recently won a Pulitzer Prize for his article "Upton Sinclair's The Jungle and Why Computers Hate Jews"

Old Farts: Not Silent, or Dead - Yet.

If there's one thing in this world that really gets under my skin, it's old people. From the day we were born, old fogies have been trying to rob us of our individuality, suppress our creativity, and telling us to "mind our Ps and Qs." And just what are these mysterious Ps and Qs that we should mind them? Well, in my book they stand for Pain and Queasiness, because that is what I feel every time I see an old person.

For starters, all old people think that they know what's best in every situation, they always have to tell you what that is, and it is always either completely wrong or incredibly disgusting. One particular geezer once imparted to me in the same conversation these two gems: If you don't take ballet, you'll turn into a raging lesbian, and Don't forget to wipe properly or you might get a rash. It is conclusive from this example that all old people are universally crazy and nasty.

Secondly, these geriatrics think that simply because they've been around longer that they should get preferential treatment. Do you realize that the senior discount at Denny's is a whole 10% more than the student discount? And between those two categories, which one do you think is contributing thoughtful, valuable assets to the world, and which one do you think contributes only to the depletion of the ozone due to excessive farting? Old people do in fact produce ten times the amount of methane per fart as a young person. That's science.

So next time you see an old person, knock them over and steal their purse. Thanks to Denny's, you're gonna need it at least 10% more.

Kathleen Cooperstein is a horrible person. She also has yet to realize that the discount at Denny's is strategic third degree price discrimination which actually improves their profits.

OPEN LETTER TO DR. KRIZ

How could you, Dr. Kriz? I trusted you. I thought we had something going here. The arrangement seemed simple enough: you stood there and taught deforms with your shoes off, and I sat there and listened. We were just supposed to go about our business and try not to get in each others' way. Most importantly, we agreed to be decent, civilized people. What part of that did you not understand?

Kriz

What? You don't know what I'm talking about? Well maybe I can help refresh your memory.

I remember it like it was last Tuesday...

DON'T FORGET!!!

HILLCREST COFFEE HOUSE
8:00 PM—???

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22ND
(TONIGHT!)

HILLCREST DINING ROOM

I probably because it was. You were going on and on and on and on about why chalk fails diagonally in torsion and trying but failing—as usual—to make some sort of meaningful metaphor. It was here that you committed your offense and I lost all respect for you. I believe that you started off on a tangent about how "everybody hates MacGyver."

Excuse me? I wanted to throw my spiral notebook at you! Are you sure that's really what you meant to say? MacGyver is my hero. How can anybody dislike an exemplary citizen like MacGyver? Do you hate America or something?

Who else could save a lady general from a beach house... and eat a carrot? MacGyver could. How about escape from East Berlin on a coffin... that turns into a jetski? I don't think you could. Could you make a battery from a cactus... and then call the FAA and have them know you by name? Not a chance.

Hey Dr. Kriz, that's an Uzi. Well, to MacGyver, now it's a wrench.

MacGyver

Next time you try to use a metaphor to connect one of your crazy tangents, you should make sure you don't hurt anybody's feelings. Next you'll be telling me that beams bend when you load them or something. I don't know if I'll ever be able to trust you again.

Your friend,
Peter

Peter Kauffmann is the Mid-Atlantic campaign manager for "MacGyver for President in 2008"

Hillpress Staff

Editor in Chief Brad Shapiro
Analogy Analyst Peter Kauffmann
Professor of Science Jeremy Henry
Senior Citizen Expert Kathleen Cooperstein
Late to Class Ryan Luck
Architect of Evil Erin Rubin
Nutrition Correspondent Kari Adkins
Special Features Editor David Chocolate